Ithra Steel Tube Skin

Ithra is wrapped in 93,403 individually-bent steel pipes which, if laid end to end, would stretch 360 km. The stainless-steel tube skin that surrounds the building not only reflects sun heat away, but it acts like a mashrabiya, an ancient cooling system traditional to the region. This greatly increases the building's efficiency and reinforces Ithra's mission of sustainability.

Ithra. Inspiring Hearts. Enriching Minds.

Ithra is a destination that ignites cultural curiosity, stimulates knowledge exploration and inspires creativity through the power of ideas, imagination, innovation and knowledge-based experiences.

A destination like no other, Ithra is the beating heart of the Kingdom's cultural and creative ecosystem — it is where imagination is powered, ideas are born, knowledge is shared and culture is celebrated.

Welcome to Ithra

Located in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia, the King Abdulaziz Center for World Culture, an Aramco initiative popularly known as Ithra, is an institution dedicated to fostering the Kingdom’s blooming creative and cultural industries and nurturing the cultural and human development of the Saudi people. It features a five-gallery museum, an exhibition hall, a performing arts theater, an innovation lab, a cinema, a state-of-the-art library, extensive education facilities and the first children’s museum in the nation.

Ithra — from the Arabic word for “enrichment” — is a platform for art, creativity and culture. It is a cultural catalyst, a global gateway and an economic engine. It is Ithra’s mission to foster the creative and cultural sector; and it does so by supporting the work of individuals in visual, cinematic and performing arts, as well as design and entrepreneurship. The Ithra building is an architectural masterpiece resulting from an international competition won by the Norwegian firm Snøhetta. It features a unique skin made of 360 km of individually bent steel pipes. With the steel-pipe exterior set alongside the rammed earth walls of Ithra’s interior plaza, the building combines the world’s newest and oldest architectural technologies to create a model of environmental sustainability that has twice been awarded Gold LEED status — Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design, the world’s leading green certification — both for its built environment and for its operations and maintenance. In 2018, Ithra was listed by TIME magazine as one of “the 100 greatest places in the world to visit.”

Inspiring Hearts.
Enriching Minds.

Director's Statement

A Year of Milestones and Cultural Enrichment at Ithra

2024 has been a landmark year for the King Abdulaziz Center for World Culture (Ithra)—a year of achievements, creativity and profound cultural impact. We proudly welcomed our five-millionth visitor, curated thousands of inspiring programs and expanded our reach, all while sharpening our focus on key areas of impact.

At Ithra, our mission is clear: to enrich people's lives through cultural and creative engagement. This year, we deepened our connection with diverse audiences, delivered rewarding visitor experiences that inspire and educate and worked to create a positive impact on society. Throughout all of this, sustainability—both environmental and economic—remains at the core of our values, as we work toward a future where culture is not just an expression but a driving force for progress. We see the cultural ecosystem as a powerful economic engine for Saudi Arabia. This belief is reflected in Ithra's diverse offerings, where financial sustainability plays an increasing role in our programming. From business models that support the creative sector to workshops that equip emerging talents with professional skills, our approach is built for long-term success.

Abdullah AlRashid

Director, King Abdulaziz Center for World Culture (Ithra)

Inspiring the Next Generation

Investing in youth remains a priority. In 2024 our volunteer program engaged over 4,500 young people, offering valuable educational experiences and opportunities for cultural engagement. A personal highlight was An Introduction to the Creative and Cultural Industries which saw our summer camp introduce Saudi youth to career opportunities in the cultural sector. Ithra also continues to inspire through unforgettable performances. This year we were honored to see the iconic Egyptian composer Omar Khairat whilst the English Chamber Orchestra, in a defining moment, chose to perform a piece by a young Saudi composer they had met at an Ithra workshop. These moments are not just milestones, they represent the success of our ongoing mission to foster professionalism and creative excellence among emerging talents.

Preserving Heritage, Shaping the Future

One of our most ambitious initiatives in 2024 was the Islamic Art Conference, which featured a diverse range of programs and hosted more than 27 international speakers from over 13 countries. United under the theme 'In Praise of the Artisan', this initiative was a call to action reviving and celebrating traditional crafts as vital, sustainable professions. Among the many extraordinary artists featured, master carver Siddique Bhati created the largest and highest-quality jali wall since the 17th century. This monumental project engaged 400 artisans, passing down centuries-old craftsmanship and ensuring its legacy lives on. This effort aligns with our anticipation of Saudi Arabia's Year of Handicrafts, reinforcing Ithra's role in preserving and revitalizing cultural traditions.

Meanwhile, 2024 was also the Year of the Camel, a tribute to an enduring symbol of Saudi heritage. In partnership with Layan Culture, we mounted the exhibition The Camel Through the Ages, and during National Day celebrations, we welcomed a stunning camel caravan in collaboration with the Riyadh-based Camel Club—a spectacle that captivated audiences and honored the Kingdom's rich traditions.

Enrichment for All

True to its name, Ithra (Arabic for enrichment) is a place where culture comes alive. Whether through concerts, films, interactive library activities, exhibitions or hands-on learning experiences, we strive to offer something for everyone—families, lifelong learners, children and creative professionals alike.

As we step into an even brighter future, Ithra stands as a beacon in the Kingdom's cultural landscape. We are proud of our achievements in 2024, but our journey doesn't stop here. With renewed energy and ambition, we invite you to experience all that Ithra has to offer—because 2025 promises to be even more extraordinary.

Ithra: Transforming a Cultural Ecosystem

Entering its sixth year of being open to the public, Ithra pivoted with even more focus on the future. As a pioneering Saudi cultural institution, Ithra is charged with several tasks: nurturing the creative and cultural sector, building audiences, establishing a national baseline of cultural excellence and paving the way to the future with global cultural experiences.

Unlike most cultural centers around the world where there are established audiences and consumption models for theatrical, performance, cinematic and visual arts, Ithra's great challenges have included building audiences from scratch and working to establish content production in multiple cultural categories. To do this, the Saudi Aramco leaders who founded Ithra chose to initiate an even broader range of offerings, including a world-class library, the Kingdom's first children's museum and a component dedicated to creativity and innovation — the Idea Lab. The building would be of a huge scale with an even vaster slate of facilities and programs. Community. Culture. Creativity. Education. Intellectual development. To optimize the project, Aramco held its first architectural competition, which was won by the Norway-based firm Snøhetta. When Ithra opened to the public in 2018, it was immediately upheld as an architectural masterpiece: the building achieved Gold LEED certification - a prestigious green/sustainable credential - and it was named by TIME magazine as “one of the world's top 100 places to visit.”

From the perspective of six years of operation, this report seeks to answer the questions: Has Ithra lived up to the original hopes and expectations for the Kingdom's largest CSR? Is it delivering for the people of Saudi Arabia? Is it — so far — a success?

In his opening remarks at the 2024 TecShift summit held at Ithra, Ahmad Al-Khowaiter, Aramco Executive Vice President for Technology & Innovation, commended Ithra as his lead example of turning a bold idea into a pioneering institution in the creative and cultural sector — one that “has not only led the transformation of the Kingdom's cultural landscape, it is also helping to advance human knowledge on a global scale.” He continued: “Ithra illustrates a fundamental truth: game-changing ideas do not emerge fully formed in one day. It may begin with a spark, but the journey from idea to execution relies on contributions from many along the way.

Ithra embodies what this summit (TecShift) hopes to achieve. It began as a bold and ambitious idea, one that perhaps some people thought had no chance of success. But others bought in, they accepted, and eventually a whole range of stakeholders were behind Ithra — from artists to architects to cultural experts and more. They all came together, each contributing their own unique capabilities. Working together, they brought the project to success.”

This is Ithra — a spark that has grown into a successful game-changing idea. While a pioneering cultural institution cannot come about without the leadership of seasoned professionals, it can have little impact if it doesn't connect with its intended audiences. In 2024, Ithra welcomed its five-millionth visitor, surpassing both its goals and the expectations of many. Because the local public was not in the habit of experiencing the offerings of a multifaceted cultural center, outreach has been critical to this success. One such offering is the Alsharqiya Gets Creative initiative which, in 2024, grew to offering over 1,600 events throughout the Eastern Province, working with more than 400 creative partners. Tens of thousands attended. It is the largest community-oriented creativity program in Saudi Arabia.

The Center is currently focusing on knowledge transfer in the cultural industries — from commissioning traditional artisans so they can share their generational knowledge in a vocational setting to offering workshops for filmmaking, performance and cinematic professionals — with the understanding that changing the landscape of the creative sector is a long-term process. A fundamental component for successful change is taking a strategic approach to sustainability. It is not enough for an artist to learn a skill or make a product. There needs to be a market and support, which can only happen on a broad scale by growing audiences and expanding the desire of the public to understand and value cultural productions. If there is no one to purchase or commission the work, the profession withers. By informing the public and offering them experiences that reinforce the value of cultural productions, Ithra is nurturing the entire sector as well as the role of Saudi culture in society. This is a process that takes time and ceaseless work; with our ongoing efforts and the ethic of excellence, as we saw in 2024, Ithra is having an impact and finding success. One 2024 effort that has further opened the public's doorways to cultural knowledge was the Ithra Library's consolidation and simplification of membership and access to its electronic assets. Now, Ithra Members can read over 60,000 e-books and audiobooks in Arabic and English in the Ithra E-Library and more than 7,000 magazines and international newspapers via the PressReader mobile app.

Other 2024 public intellectual enrichment programming included the education-oriented Ithra Academy, a talent development platform that seeks to help Saudis compete in the global market by offering hands-on and cutting-edge content designed and delivered by national and international experts. The Academy offers courses and masterclasses in six domains: creative leadership, art and design, film and performing art, literary studies, music, and science and technology.

It takes creativity, inspiration and experience, but the implementation of game-changing ideas that can fundamentally transform an entire cultural ecosystem may indeed start with the smallest of sparks. Certainly, it requires contributions of many and the full participation of leadership, professionals, staff, audiences, communities and, quite often, the entire society. This is our mission. At Ithra, we are working to light the beacons of the future.

A Destinstion for Inspiration

Ithra is a world-class destination and the beating heart of Saudi Arabia’s culture and creative industries, contributing to its prosperity by enabling talent, supporting content production and encouraging cross-cultural exchange that promotes social harmony and human development.

Priorities

We at Ithra aim to make a lasting impact on our audiences and ensure that we are inclusive. Our programs range from the best of international culture to projects revitalizing areas that need to be reimagined and reinvented for the future. We equip our volunteers with the skills they need in the modern international workplace. It is our goal to professionalize the Kingdom’s creative and cultural ecosystem at all levels — from supporting emerging and established professionals to introducing youth to the possibilities of creative vocations.

Mission:

Ithra aims to make a tangible and positive impact on human development by inspiring a passion for knowledge, creativity and cross-cultural engagement for the future of the Kingdom.

Vision:

At Ithra, we envision a future in which Saudi Arabia is a beacon for knowledge and creativity.

Building for the Future

The award-winning building was conceptualized as a collection of five stones symbolizing unity and mutual support. The ground level stands for the present, below is the past, and the upper elements represent the future.

Ithra’s message of sustainability includes yet goes far past environmental impact, which is a genuinely impactful reality and a model for the ethic that cultural efforts can lead to growth in terms of economic as well as environmental impact. The mashrabiya—the centuries-old Middle Eastern cooling system easily recognizable as the cantilevered wooden screen windows that jut out from traditional buildings—is evident throughout the facility’s architectural functions and aesthetic — a metaphorical reminder of long-established successful innovation of the Arab world regarding both energy and improving quality-of-life for people, as well as a literal concept used to turn away the actual effects of solar heat on the building’s exterior.

Even before construction began, Ithra had been designed to be a beacon of environmental sustainability, specifically targeting Gold LEED certification. Ithra’s architecturally unique steel pipe skin differentiates it from any other building in the world. It combines this newest building technology with one of the oldest – rammed earth, a combination of uncemented dirt, gravel and clay that is watered and then compressed into a structural form. Rammed earth has excellent insulation, humidity-control and acoustic qualities. Ithra’s rammed earth elements proudly feature earth from around the Kingdom, and this use of local materials is a critical sustainability element for LEED certification. Ithra achieved certification for operations both through LEED (Gold) and became the first facility in the world to be named with the highest possible certification, the Diamond Level Certification for “Operations + Existing Buildings” in the Saudi Mostadam Program, the Ministry of Municipal, Rural Affairs and Housing’s sustainability rating and certification system.

Architecturally unique throughout the world, Ithra is wrapped in 93,403 stainless steel tubes totaling more than 360 km in combined length. This steel pipe skin creates a natural air flow that removes solar heat gain from the exterior of the building, much like a mashrabiya. The mashrabiya is celebrated in Ithra’s design through the steel pipe skin, the covered walkway around the building and the perforated steel gates in the Plaza.

Ithra Components

At the heart of Ithra are the people who make up our teams in programs, communications, administration, advisory, technical services and operations.

We work together in the spirit of uncompromising professionalism to ensure the public experience of Ithra is defined by our ethic of excellence that drives our nine components.
